

BASCD Spring Scientific Meeting 2024

Time to Explore Collaboration

Thursday 11th - Friday 12th April 2024
University of Greenwich

Introduction

It's my pleasure to welcome members and visitors to the 2024 BASCD spring scientific meeting, which is being hosted by the University of Greenwich.

The University has three campuses and the main one at the Old Royal Naval College will be the location for BASCD 2024. This campus is the centre piece of Maritime Greenwich, a World Heritage Site, which has been described by UNESCO as being of 'outstanding universal value'. The site was originally the location of the Palace of Placentia where both Henry VIII and Elizabeth I were born, but this was demolished after the English Civil War and replaced by the buildings BASCD will be using.

Some of the buildings on this campus were originally constructed to serve as the Royal Hospital for Seamen and were chartered by King William III and Queen Mary II and designed by Sir Christopher Wren. The campus is shared with Trinity Laban Conservatoire of Music and Dance, who will be providing the musical accompaniment at the drinks' reception on first day of this BASCD 2024 event.

Greenwich as a place is notable for its maritime history and if you take a look around you can find the Greenwich Meridian line (00 longitude) in the pavement by the famous tea clipper ship, the 'Cutty Sark' and, you can set your watch by Greenwich Mean Time at the Royal Observatory.

Following the tradition of exploration emanating from our location at Greenwich the programme for this event has been planned around the theme of exploring collaboration. Our speakers have generously agreed to share their knowledge and expertise on collaboration to improve oral health. I hope their experience of the ups and downs of collaboration enable us all to explore this subject from different angles as part of the plenary sessions and to discover new knowledge.

The sense of exploration into the unknown can also be seen via the poster competitions, where much of the work outlined is generating new evidence to in the field of dental public health.

Dr Charlotte Jeavons
BASCD President-Elect

Aims:

To explore the ways in which collaboration across professional and other boundaries can add value to programmes and policies to improve oral health.

Objectives:

- Identify how collaboration across professional boundaries can add value to oral health improvement programmes and policies
- Discuss the benefits of collaboration in different dental and oral health environments
- Explore the variety of organisational and individual co-collaborators to improve oral health
- Understand the personal and professional requirement to facilitate collaboration on oral health improvement policies and programmes
- Identify different types of consultation, collaboration, and partnership work to improve population oral health
- Appreciate the need to collaborate beyond our own professional boundaries on work to reduce dental disease and improve oral health

Learning content:

This scientific meeting is intended address how we can facilitate collaboration across boundaries to improve population oral health. It is intended to facilitate an exploration of how, when, and why collaboration with others can add value to any oral health improvement policy or programmes.

Development outcomes:

This ECPD event meets the criteria for the General Dental Council's development outcomes A, B, C and D.
